Madison County Man Drops 200 Feet Out of Window

A well-known local story teller was spinning yarns for a crowd of interested listeners Saturday night.

They had been discussing the distance a man could fall without injury.

"Why, I know a man," said Uncle, "right from this town who dropped 200 feet out of a window—and it didn't hurt him a bit."

"Nonsense!" said the crowd.

"No, it's a fact," insisted the old man. "But they were pigs' feet!"

"I reckon, though," he continued, "a man could stand a fall like that—if he could fall on something as strong and as springy as reliable as an American Fence."

"For if you would see the way it turns mad bulls and butting rams, you'd think that there's about no impact it can't resist."

Is made of best materials; the simplest construction; for every use, in every size and weight of wire desired. Sold by

Save Your Hair
Don't Use Preparations Containing Poisonous Sugar of Lead or Sulphur.

Even if you have healthy you ought to use a little PARISIAN SAGE once a week as a hair dressing. It keeps the hair healthy; prevents scalp itch, falling hair and dandruff, and—baldness.

But be sure you get PARISIAN SAGE. There are many imitations.

The girl with Auburn hair is on every carton and bottle of PARISIAN SAGE.
It banishes dandruff, stops falling hair and scalp itch, and imparts to the hair a brilliancy and lustre that all women as well as men love so dearly. PAR-ISIAN SAGE is a daintily perfumed and refreshing hair dressing. It's the best hair tonic you can buy. Earge bottle 50 cents at Perry's Drug Store and dealers everywhere.

Stopped His Paper.

A couple of months ago a cranky sort of an old man came to this office and stopped his paper because something in it did not just suit his fancy. We have frequently met him on the street since that time and it is amusing to note the look of surprise on the old fellow's face that we are still in existence, regardless of the fact that he stopped his paper.
Some day—and it won't be long, either that old gentleman will turn up his toes.

His heart will be still forever. Neighbors and friends will follow his lifeless clay to the silent city and lay them to rest among the silent flowers. An obituary will be published in these columns telling what a kind father, a good neighbor and beloved citizen he was—which the recording angel will overlook for charity sake—and in a very short time he will be forgotten. As he lies out there in the cold, cold graveyard wrapped in the silent slumbers of death, he will never know that the last kind word spoken of him was by the editor of that paper which in life he so spitefully "stopped." Did you ever pause for just a moment and think that your editor, whoever he may be, will write your obituary some day?

For earache, toothache, pains, burns, scalds, sore throat, try Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, a splendid remedy for emergencies. 1m

The Ages of the Presidential Candidates.

It is interesting to know that every one of the seven candidates, have been admitted to the bar, five of them have had successful careers in the law. Two have been judges. Not one of them is a business man, and no one, save Mr. Harmon, has had any considerable experience with business affairs, either large or small. No one of them is a rich man, and though several of them, by virtue of their high talents, have been able at times to earn large incomes, they have all been hard workers. Two or three of them have been relatively poor men all their lives, living frugally and devoting themselves unreservedly to public work.

All of the seven, save possibly Harmon, are at the very prime of life for national leadership. These are their ages:

Underwood 50 years old
Roosevelt 54 years old
Taft 55 years old
Wilson 55 years old
La Follette 57 years old
Clark 62 years old
Harmon 60 years old

It is also of curious rather than of important interest that most of the seven were born in States which have long been fertile in the production of Presidents and presidential candidates. Wilson was born in Virginia, Clark and Underwood in Kentucky, Taft and Harmon in Ohio, and Roosevelt in New York. Only one candidate, La Follette, comes from what may be called a new presidential State.

It is now well known that not more than one case of rheumatism in ten requires any internal treatment whatever.
All that is needed is a free application of Chamberlain's Liniment and massaging the parts at each application. Try it and see how quickly it will relieve the pain and soreness. Sold by all dealers. 1m

The administration forces triumphed in easy fashion at the State convention in Louisville last week. Notwithstanding the information given out by Ollie James and his followers, that his selection was certain, Governor McCreary was elected chairman by a good majority and Vansant was chosen Chairman State of Central Committee without dissent on Stevenson, of Winchester, realizing his defeat did not permit his name to go before the convention. Governor McCreary and the administration carried every district with the exception of First, Second and Fifth, a splendid endorsement justly deserved.

CHAMP CLARK carried Kentucky overwhelmingly and the credit of the splendid victory of the former Kentuckian is due largely to the county press and one or two daily papers in the State. That the county press is a factor in political battle is a fact that politics cannot refute.

The power of the press has been much heralded, but if conditions remain as they have been for the past few years, it will be hereafter the power of the county press.

A Testimonial.
Have been using "MARY" Flour, made by the Madison Milling Co. for the last five months and am always delighted with the results of my baking. I take pleasure in recommending it.

Miss White Selected.
Miss Katherine White, daughter of Circuit Clerk Roy White, has been selected by the Board of Education to fill the vacancy in Caldwell High School, caused by the resignation of Miss Gordon. This selection on the part of the Board will prove popular with a host of friends of the school, as she is eminently qualified and fitted for the position and will undoubtedly prove a valuable acquisition to the splendid faculty of Caldwell High School.

same," said Rose rather haughtily, but afterwards when she was in her own room she laughed heartily and later on grew quite sober.

"He looked very like a woman—except for his blue eyes I wonder—"

After that Rose did not seem to care to ride out even under the protection of Mr. Phinney, although she gave no reason for her sudden resolution.

After supper one night while Rose sat at the piano playing very softly there came the heavy tramping of feet from the piazza and suddenly entered the room accompanied by the desperado, Duke Henderson. Rose flushed and gave her hand to the stranger as Mr. Riddle performed the introduction.

"I'll go and bring Mrs. Riddle," said Uncle Rob, and he hastily departed leaving Rose alone with the desperado.

Rose found herself avoiding the glance of a pair of sparkling eyes, eyes that under happy circumstances might be very gay indeed; now they searched her face eagerly as if looking for some fault and her sense of constraint the eyes fell to a moody contemplation of the carpet.

Rose wondered if he knew how handsome he looked sitting there in

Desperado Duke

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"To think that I should come back to Montana again!" Rose Carson sighed blissfully as Mr. Riddle drove into the yard of the ranch and skillfully turned the spirited horses around by the stable door.

"We hope to keep you here this time, my dear!" he said as she sprang to the ground and rushed into the ample parlor of his wife.

"My dear!" said Mr. Riddle, "I think that your foolish mother decided to go away again, and that you are sent back to us so soon. I am afraid that your mother decided to go abroad—otherwise we would have had a lonely winter! Tell me, is Agatha going to marry that good-looking Englishman?"

Rose Carson laughed merrily at Aunt Ruth's eager questioning. To both of them, Mrs. Carson's numerous love affairs were a never-ceasing topic of interest. Love's whims were young and ridiculously pretty for a widow with a grown up daughter. She was indeed a frivolous, rather selfish person, but without a charming in her self-interest that one could not be entirely vexed with her. This was the second time she had sent her daughter out to spend the winter with the Riddles to Montana—Mrs. Carson had been a Riddle—while the little widow calmly appropriated her comfortable income to purposes of pleasure.

"I don't believe," said Rose, "that I will marry that Englishman!" repeated Mrs. Riddle, sitting down in Rose's room while the girl removed the dust of the long ride from the railroad station.

"Dear Aunt Ruth, I really believe that mother will marry Mr. Cheeser before she returns to New York. I could easily believe your mother has a perfectly charming little letter announcing that she has decided that it dozen shapes. If he did know it, he gave him no pleasure, for once he sighed heavily and again he glanced swiftly at her, and as her eyes met he resumed his stare at the floor.

"It is a glorious night," he said at last.

"Charming."

"The Riddle says you're going out for a ride with him—he has been kind enough to say that I may accompany you. I hope you don't mind."

"Oh, no, she said happily. "If you will excuse me I will go and put on my riding skirt."

He held open the door for her and she stepped out, there might have been the slightest touch of her head as she smiled ruefully and sat down again.

When Rose came down again she was a fair picture in a dust-colored habit with a felt hat perched on the back of her head.

Mrs. Riddle waited in the piazza until the three had dismounted and she and she smiled with satisfaction as she returned to the parlor.

"The little minx!" she chuckled throatily.

Mr. Riddle rose beside Mr. Riddle and left Rose in peace on the other side of her uncle. None of them talked much save the men, who spoke in low voices in monosyllabic tones, until the moonlight on the country, and the abundant rainfall. Overhead the moon rode high in the blue arch of sky and before them stretched the dark plain.

All at once Mr. Riddle uttered sharp exclamation and dismounted to discover that his horse had gone suddenly lame. There was nothing for it but to turn back to the ranch. This Mr. Riddle would not hear of.

"I was going to take you to Silver Springs, Rose. Now Henderson will be here and you will wait here. It is only a couple of miles farther on."

"But Uncle Bob, I'd rather not go," protested Rose, but Mr. Riddle insisted.

When Duke Henderson came beside her in grim appreciation of her grudgingly given companionship he covered the rest of the distance to Silver Springs in a twinkling. The two horses looked together into the sparkling silver waters at their feet.

"Witches are abroad tonight,"

"You're right," Rose eyes were very bright as she brushed her brown hair into shiny coils around her head.

Mrs. Riddle was perturbed. "I hope you're not feeling too badly, wouldn't you, dear?"

"Yes, and no," answered the girl slowly. "Mother and I are so very different, but we're both the same person or the same things. I could be perfectly happy here with you and Uncle Bob the rest of my life—except I don't want to. I don't want to stop here one night. There's the whole description of our characters in a nutshell. See how you like it?"

"And you don't care for New York?"

"—It's not as though people had such a good time there," sighed Mrs. Riddle.

"They do and they bore with the it all. The people who really have good time in New York are the visitors. I would rather live out here and be one of the visitors sometimes."

"Cross my heart!" She smiled sulkily at Mrs. Riddle.

"You are so glad, dear, because if my mother comes, marry her, I shall be like Mary and I want you to come out here and make your home with us for the rest of your days if you wish, but I hope you will marry one of the good men and make a home for yourself."

Rose threw her arms around her aunt and kissed her tenderly.

"I don't want to be happy here, really want me—somehow seem to be a misfit in New York. Out here, I feel as though I had come back home, that I am breathing my native air, that I have found my way."

"Then if you marry one of our neighbors you will belong to us entirely. I hope there isn't anybody else who would want you."

Rose laughed heartily. "No body there or anywhere else, auntie!"

"Then that's all right!" declared Mrs. Riddle.

"I'm coming, Rose," she whispered suddenly, slipped down into his arms and when Ben Pinney saw the two riding homeward like lovers; he uttered an astonished ejaculation.

"What a pair!" he said, but he long to tame that there desperado."

"Ghosts may walk!"

"Fiddlesticks!"

"There's a girl in New York who had her fortune told one day—the seer prophesied that the girl would marry a handit! What do you think of that?"

"She started violently as she remembered the remark of Mr. Pinney; the first time they had met Duke Henderson.

"There's a handit, according to Ben Pinney," went on Mr. Henderson.

"He takes pleasure in pointing me out to strangers as the prototype of Jesse James."

"He told me that Jesse James would have been proud to have had your record," murmured Rose, looking down at the silver pool.

"I don't think I seem alarmed," observed Henderson.

"Of course not."

"That of course isn't the fraternal sympathy you're talking about. You are our old friends and that I kiss you, Duke," he said sulkily.

"Duke Henderson! how dare you remark that to me?—You say I didn't kiss them?—I would go to—don't think like it—I told you I hated you—I do—indeed I do! I don't know what you are doing out here—I thought you were in the right—Her voice trembled ominously.

"And I knew that you loved me all the time, Rose, and I've been hoping to tell you the truth—now I can tell you that you do! You can run from one end of the world to the other, but you can't get away from loving me." He slipped from his saddle and stood close beside the horse.

She looked down at him through sudden tears.

"I'm coming, Rose," she whispered suddenly, slipped down into his arms and when Ben Pinney saw the two riding homeward like lovers; he uttered an astonished ejaculation.

"What a pair!" he said, but he long to tame that there desperado."

Two months passed and October came with crisp mornings, sunny days and a few showers and late frosts. Rose Carson rode every day, sometimes alone and occasionally accompanied by her uncle or one of the men.

One of these men from the Riddle ranch was a long, lean, sandy-haired individual, named Phinney, who usually wore a distasteful frown as though the escorting of lovely young women along meandering trails bored him extremely. On the contrary he was immensely flattered that Mr. Riddle had chosen him as body guard to his niece. Mr. Phinney was fond of a joke.

"Who is that?" inquired Rose one day as they met a man riding up the trail.

Mr. Phinney favored the stranger with a scowl and received in return a stare of amusement from a pair of dark blue eyes.

"That," he said after the stranger had passed beyond hearing, "that is the gentleman who has been the greatest desperado of the plains. His name is Henderson, Duke Henderson, and he's not a record that Jesse James would have been real proud to have owned."

"Indeed!" gasped Rose. "What has he done?"

"He hasn't! he hasn't! he doesn't. There you have the answer," returned Mr. Phinney.

"Look out for him, m'm'am," he warned gloomily. "Why he would steal the very horse you're riding on if I hadn't been along!"

"I would run that risk just the same."

It has long been a Democratic custom in Madison county to give a second term to the victor to perform his duties, welcoming the first term of office, and you can make no mistake by deciding to cast your vote for R. B. Terrill for re-election to the office of County Court Clerk. His record is open for the closest inspection.

FEE DING
For Production of Eggs

This is one very essential point, which you should never at any time overlook. Hens cannot lay unless they are supplied with the material from which Eggs are made. A Hen is only a machine for making Eggs and out of the material which she finds in her feed, and unless she is given the proper TONIC regularly, along with her feed, she cannot manufacture EGGS.

THE TRUCK PATCH

By JEANNE O. LOIZEAUX

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Co.)

As the six o'clock stream of shop girls came from the side entrance of the big store, Mamie let it carry her along. She lifted her thin hands to pin the big, flamboyant hat to her tousled fair hair. Her thin shoulders stooped a little, and she walked with the weariness of the first enervating hot days of spring. It was Saturday night, and she was wondering if she could afford a really satisfying supper.

A big, browned, awkward young fellow came up from behind and fell into her arms. She started, startled, and some girls behind her giggled.

"It's only me, Mamie. I won't eat you," he said.

"I told you not to hang about for me," she said.

"I don't hang about for any girl, and you know it. I purposely got here just in time to catch you. When are you going to marry me?"

"Never, and you know it. I've said it often enough." She gave a backward glance and saw that the other girls were looking at them. "William, please also had deserted him. The floor manager, with who Flossie Peters. Mamie despised Flossie.

"Is it that little counter-jumper that's worrying you?" asked the man beside her. "If you wanted a real man, one that had other good intentions, strength, or a prospect of a home to give you, I'd let you go. But I'll take William by the back of the neck and drop him like a kitten if he doesn't let you alone! I can't even tell you what sort he is. You'd be fool enough not to believe me." They still went on their way home, now turned up a quiet side street. Young Graves was silent a moment.

"Look here, Mamie. Two years I've known you, and watched you get into and pale at starvation wages and work you admit you hate. You know I can take good care of you. You know I think a lot of you. I never wanted to marry any other girl but you. I want to marry you. I've always had an idea that you could love me, if you would let yourself. Tell me why you won't. It's only fair."

She shrugged her shoulders, still evasive.

"We've got to hurry. I'm going out tonight. Do you think I want to get married to a hayseed and get down to work you admit you hate. You know I can take good care of you. You know I think a lot of you. I never wanted to marry any other girl but you. I want to marry you. I've always had an idea that you could love me, if you would let yourself. Tell me why you won't. It's only fair."

MURAT SHOWED HIS WISDOM

Waited for Napoleon to Give Him the Hand of His Youngest Sister, Caroline.

"I wish that some of my field marshals had taken the precaution not to marry when they were only sergeants," Napoleon is supposed to have grumbled, when he saw some of the ladies at his court. Murat, the dashing leader of cavalry at Marengo, did not make the mistake of his fellows, and waited for Bonaparte to give him the hand of his youngest sister, Caroline.

With her he reigned over the Two Sicilies as Joachim I. Wishing to stand well with the queen, the bishop of Tarento gave her a birthday present of one of Simon Yotter's "Books of Hours," printed on vellum in 1498 by Pierre Pigoucheur of Paris and containing 21 fine large wood cuts. Recently this little book appeared in the library of the late Louis Lady Ashburton at Sotheby's and realized $235 (Sabin). It may, therefore, go to America, whither Murat and Caroline's son, Napoleon Achille, went and married a niece of Washington—London Telegraph.

Test of Friendship.
 A member of the board of education who was present at the recent commencement exercises in Sumner avenue school, says the Newark News, heard James L. Hays relate an incident which defined the word "friend."

It is well known that Mr. Hays is one of the best friends of the boys and girls of the schools. His happy faculty for gaining the confidence of the youngsters was responsible for his being in their hearing when two juveniles were discussing friendship.

Here is one coming citizen's opinion of a friend indeed, as the member of the board heard it:

"Say, Jimmie," told me what is a friend."

"I think," replied his companion, "that a friend is a fellow who knows all about you, and yet likes you."

THE TRUCK PATCH

By JEANNE O. LOIZEAUX

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Co.)

As the six o'clock stream of shop girls came from the side entrance of the big store, Mamie let it carry her along. She lifted her thin hands to pin the big, flamboyant hat to her tousled fair hair. Her thin shoulders stooped a little, and she walked with the weariness of the first enervating hot days of spring. It was Saturday night, and she was wondering if she could afford a really satisfying supper.

A big, browned, awkward young fellow came up from behind and fell into her arms. She started, startled, and some girls behind her giggled.

"It's only me, Mamie. I won't eat you," he said.

"I told you not to hang about for me," she said.

"I don't hang about for any girl, and you know it. I purposely got here just in time to catch you. When are you going to marry me?"

"Never, and you know it. I've said it often enough." She gave a backward glance and saw that the other girls were looking at them. "William, please also had deserted him. The floor manager, with who Flossie Peters. Mamie despised Flossie.

"Is it that little counter-jumper that's worrying you?" asked the man beside her. "If you wanted a real man, one that had other good intentions, strength, or a prospect of a home to give you, I'd let you go. But I'll take William by the back of the neck and drop him like a kitten if he doesn't let you alone! I can't even tell you what sort he is. You'd be fool enough not to believe me." They still went on their way home, now turned up a quiet side street. Young Graves was silent a moment.

"Look here, Mamie. Two years I've known you, and watched you get into and pale at starvation wages and work you admit you hate. You know I can take good care of you. You know I think a lot of you. I never wanted to marry any other girl but you. I want to marry you. I've always had an idea that you could love me, if you would let yourself. Tell me why you won't. It's only fair."

She shrugged her shoulders, still evasive.

"We've got to hurry. I'm going out tonight. Do you think I want to get married to a hayseed and get down to work you admit you hate. You know I can take good care of you. You know I think a lot of you. I never wanted to marry any other girl but you. I want to marry you. I've always had an idea that you could love me, if you would let yourself. Tell me why you won't. PAY ACTORS BY THE YARD

Illuminating Statistics Come to Light in Suit Brought by Moving Picture Concern.

Bernhardt's acting is worth a cent a yard. Coquelin's costs 5 cents and Eva Lavalliere can and does draw 10 cents for every three feet of her posing. These illuminating statistics came to light in the course of a suit which one of the picture companies is bringing because several miles of the product furnished them was said to be below standard.

"That acting ought to be paid for by the yard is no new idea, although it is not generally stated with such brutal frankness. An evening's 'entertainment' has to last a certain conventional number of minutes, or it is 'not worth the money.' It has to be cut into a conventional number of pieces and adorned with a certain kind of conventional embroidery. The 'actor' has to be on the stage a good portion of the time; in other words, he or she must contribute a certain number of yards of acting at every performance or the public will go where they can get more stuff for their money.

Bernhardt gets less from the moving picture people than Lavalliere—about one-tenth as much. That, also, is a concrete illustration of the market tendencies which we deplore in theory and encourage in practice throughout our own theatrical season. The demand, under all circumstances, for the actor is not the value of the prices if not the values of the theatrical commodities just as it does in other industries. If we can be induced to pay most for the tinsel and least for the shoddy and the highly-colored cotton, it is hardly fair to put all the blame on the managers. To use one of the classical expressions of our modern Hailo, theatrical managers are not 'in it for their health.'
